NATIONAL NOMINATIONS

The Nominating Committee has submitted the following slate for national offices for the 1958-59 season. Election will be at the annual meeting of the AFLA on July 5th. Donald S. Thompson, No. Ohio, President; Edmond Zeisig, Wisconsin, Vice President; Dr. James Flynn, N. J., 2nd Vice President; Jack Carnell, No. Texas, 3d Vice President; Fred Linkmeyer, So. Calif., 4th Vice President; Ralph Goldstein, Westchester, Secretary; Leo Sobel, Metropolitan, Treasurer; Tracy Jaeckel, Metropolitan, Foreign Secretary.

Nominations opposing any one or more of the above selections may be filed by petition of not less than ten voting members of the League. The petition must be presented to the Secretary of the AFLA not later than May 1.

Division Secretaries

Membership reports are behind schedule in a great many divisions. Please send up-to-date list as soon as possible. Be sure to give complete name, address and class of membership with the appropriate check for national dues.

No representatives of a division may compete in the Sectional or National Championships unless their dues have been forwarded to the national office.

Secretaries are also reminded that they must certify qualifiers for the National Championships from their division and that this certification must reach the national secretary before June 10.

NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIPS

Electric Foil Equipment.

Electric Foil will be used in the semi-final round of the individual championships and in the final round of both the team and individual events. A lame jacket and two electric foils are required of each individual.

The Bout Committee and the AFLA will not provide lame jackets or weapons. It is hoped that the manufacturers of this equipment will have supplies available for sale and/or rental. The AFLA will have some spare weapons for rental, but these will be available only to persons whose original equipment becomes defective in the course of the Championships.

Rule 185 must be obeyed.

Notice is given to all individual and team epee fencers that the separate undergarment of at least two thickness of hemp cloth is obligatory. NO ONE will be allowed to fence epee unless he is wearing such protection and all fencers will be checked by the Bout Committee.

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

Arthur Lane's article 'Distance or Disaster' in the August 1957 issue seems to me to do more harm than good. It is not my intention to ridicule the author or his efforts, but there is need to point out his errors.

In the first place, there is nothing in the article about distance; it deals with 'second intention'. In the second place, the greatest disaster lies in Mr. Lane's explanation of his method for developing the false attack. He apparently advocates the making of an 'all-out lunge' for the purpose of not hitting the target. To stop, as Mr. Lane says, 'within a millimeter' of the target borders on the ridiculous. Why not reach the target?

Actually, a false attack can be successfully made from much further away, with the point as much as twelve inches from the target. It may be made not only with a lunge but with a feint alone or an advance-feint, or a half-lunge, provided it gives the impression of continuity and is convincing enough to draw the desired reaction from the opponent.

The real point about distance and the attack is this: a fencer advances because he is out of distance for his attack or because he thinks the opponent will retreat upon his attack. In either case, his mind is preoccupied when he advances - and no fencer is easier to hit than one whose mind is preoccupied. Try it and see.

THE WEEK-END FENCER

by Fred Schnitzler

The week-end fencer is a new, growing breed on Long Island. He is typically a first-year man in the sport, but he is not a youngster of high school or college age. His face bears the pallor of an office and the lines of maturity that go with a family and mortgage. He is likely to be in his thirties or even forties. And he is not necessarily a "he". The current crop of week-end fencers contains a goodly sprinkling of women, whose previous experience at lunging was limited to the one masterful pass executed in plucking a husband from the bachelor ranks.

As you would expect, the movements of the week-end fencer lack the smoothness and deftness of the salle veteran. But, what they lack in experience, week-end athletes make up for with the perspiration of desire; what they lack in suppleness is compensated for by the singleness of purpose and concentration that comes with maturity.

Week-end fencing in Long Island had its origin in the adult education movement characteristic of modern suburbia. Thanks in large part to Jim Castello, Long Island resident and fencing ambassador extraordinary, the initial adult course on fencing offered at Levittown and a few other schools was a huge success. When the Levittown program shut down for the summer, the fencers took no respite from their activity. Instead, they promptly organized a club, the Long Island Swordsmen, which includes engineers, advertising men, salesmen, a doctor, a lawyer, housewives and mothers. The latter are, by the way, among the most ardent workers in the group. They can always be counted upon to collect dues, keep records, send out meeting announcements and score competitions. As a group they take their fencing as seriously as the men, against whom they frequently square off in free play.

The Long Island Swordsmen meet weekly under the direction of a paid coach, are represented in the Long Island Division of the A.F.L.A., and take part in AFLA competitions. Admittedly, at this comparatively early stage, the fencing is not of the highest calibre. But it is consistent, determined, and getting better all the time. By publicizing its activities and facilities the club has attracted a number of ex-college competitors for weekly bouts. Their experienced and helpful coaching is invaluable to the novices.

The Long Island Swordsmen, and other clubs like it now in the process of formation, typify the interest in the sport being generated in the area. What does this growing interest by athletes of the week-end variety mean to fencing?

It is not likely that week-end fencers represent a source of Olympic material, any more than week-end golfers offer much hope of providing raw material for Ryder Cup teams. But they do have a definite place in the sport, filling a long existing void. To put it more positively, fencing needs its week-end competitors just as golf is dependent upon its Saturday and Sunday duffers.

When George Santelli a few years back referred to the Olympic sabre team as "the aged and the infirm", he pointed up the fact that fencing needs more young blood. Gifted high school and college athletes have not gravitated to the sport in great numbers. One obvious reason is that American youth are just not exposed to fencing in a degree sufficient to stimulate their interest. Fencing has been a sport for fencers only. For the most part you learned abroad, or from a fencer father or brother, or because you did not seem to fit into any other sport and a school or college instructor with "a little experience" happened to be handy. Far too few are the outstanding fencers with either the patience or desire to recruit and show beginners the way.

So, if he accomplishes nothing else, the week-end fencer can spread the word among his neighbors, friends and, in particular, among his children and their friends. Take a community of week-end fencers and you have a mass movement - one from which the sport of fencing as a whole is the chief beneficiary.

Where there is exposure to fencing, interest develops. If you have any doubts consider the public competitions held at Jones Beach, L. I., N. Y. last September, which drew hundreds of spectators through the day, a hot muggy Sunday. Many were obviously interested; the comment "like to try that", was echoed among the crowd. The Jones Beach success is just an example of what can happen as a result of taking fencing out of the school gym and private club, where its audiences are limited for the most part to other fencers, and bringing it into range of public view.

Fencing needs a talent reservoir. The week-end fencer can fill this need. And thanks to adult education programs and clubs like the L. I. Swordsmen, that encourage the average working stiff lacking the time and means to frequent a salle, Long Island may one day be to fencing what Pennsylvania is to football.

"DOC" ACEL

Erwin S. Acel, New York A.C., died at the age of 69 on February 24th at Poughkeepsie.

"Doc" was a member of the 1928 Olympic sabre team and was on nine national sabre championship teams between 1923 and 1940. In 1926 he placed third in the individual championship. Slight of build and not athletically gifted, he developed a very strong defense and a deadly riposte. I was privileged to have known him since 1929, and although he was a strong competitor I don't recall his ever saying a nasty word about anyone.

"Doc" was Secretary of the AFLA in 1940 and 1941. He instilled a love for fencing in his daughter Grace and as he grew older he had every reason to be proud of her accomplishments.

He was born in Hungary and before coming to the U.S. in 1914 he received a Ph.D. in Law at the University of Berlin. A highly intelligent and sensitive individual, he wrote many articles on eastern European politics. He was president of the New York advertising agency which bears his name.

THE EPEE UNDERGARMENT

In recent months at least three fencers suffered puncture wounds which could have been fatal. Fortunately all survived without complications, but we must emphasize the need to abide by the rules. All apparently had jackets which were either new or in good condition; in no instance was the injury due to a broken blade. In each case the blade passed through the jacket and entered the rib cage; in each case the man was not wearing the protective undergarment required by Rule 185 of the AFLA and the F.I.E.

Division Chairmen must insist that this safety rule is obeyed locally. College Coaches are urged to make their teams comply. Bout Committee Chairmen should enforce the rule by physical inspections at competitions.

An additional thickness or two which is sewn into the fencing jacket does not comply with the rule. J. deCopriles.

FENCING SCHOOLS AND STYLES

By Julius Alpar

Professor of Fencing, University of Toronto

The forthcoming World Championships in Philadelphia this August will provide for many fencers and fencing masters in the Western Hemisphere their first real opportunity to see and analyse the style of the best fencers in the world. I would like to offer some comments that may help to a full appreciation of these championships.

In our observation of fencers and their teachers we often refer to their technique as belonging to a particular "school". Thus we usually contrast, in foil and epee, the French and the Italian schools; in sabre, the Italian and Hungarian schools. And in certain broad characteristics this is all well and good. But if we go into detail, we see that the good masters of each school do not always teach the same style in the same way; and that the good pupils of these masters do not always fence in the same style. Each master adds something of his own personality to the fundamentals, and thus within the French school we may speak of Clery or Lepreter, in the Italian of Barbasetti or Nadi, in the Hungarian of Santelli or Borsodi. The same is true of the fine fencers -- a D'Oriola or a Fulop, a Gerevich or a Kovacs, contribute their own individuality to their styles. How does this come about?

First, it seems clear that the characteristics of each weapon have tremendously affected the fundamentals of the traditional "schools" of fencing. Thus, in foil and epee, the Italian weapon with its cross-bar and strap fixes the position of the hand in a firm grip, so that actions on the blade can be made with authority; this type of strong hand-work in turn encourages powerful footwork. On the other hand, the simple structure of the French foil and epee requires softer, more supple handling, with greater emphasis on deception and more flexible or pliable footwork. A third style in these weapons, resulting from the acceptance of the pistol grip, is not generally favored because it requires much wider movement of the hand.

In sabre, the basic Italian technique developed when the sabre was much heavier than at present. Remember that sabre blades at first were 10mm. wide, next 6mm., then 4mm., until finally the modern thin V-section blade was adopted. With the heavy sabre it was necessary for proper blade control to carry the weapon with the forearm, on guard, on attack, and on the parries. The Hungarian technique has come into prominence with the lighter sabre and lighter hand-work, which speeds up the action and facilitates second intention. This also permits greater mobility in footwork, with slides, stamps, checks, and different kinds of fleches. (See Alpar, The Fleche, American Fencing, October 1953).

Another element that must be taken into account is the adoption of new technical developments and rules by the International Fencing Federation. There is little doubt that the electrical apparatus revolutionized epee fencing a generation ago, and that a similar revolution is now going on with the electrical foil. Speed and timing have become the most important factors in foil fencing.

Next we must recognize that fencing today is an athletic sport, and that we can learn about athletic efficiency from the experience of other sports. Good fencing masters not only promote the development of fencing but they must develop themselves to the requirements of the age.

When my old master, Borsodi, was teaching the fleche, for example, he did not do it the same way I teach it today. In the last year of his life, I was teaching beside him in the same clubs, and when I put my pupils in the starting position (taken from track and field) his remark was only "Go ahead". However, he did not like it too well if one of his pupils did not concentrate wholly on fencing but practiced skiing or light track and field. In that age, the motto was "Fencers fence only, nothing else". Today we have to insist on the fencer practicing related sports, because these sports can help his elasticity, his ability to move with lightning speed and agility when necessary, by preparing his muscles, improving the smoothness of his movements and conditioning his body. Naturally the fencer must fence as much as possible, but, during the summer and winter vacations, he may profit from engaging in other sports: light sprints and the high jump are fine exercises for heart and lung conditioning, swimming for softening the muscles and calming the nerves, moderate skiing (down-hill and slalom only) for harmony of movement and improving elasticity.

Finally we must keep in mind the individual pupil because each fencer has his own level of capability. We often see fencers with fine technique that are not successful; and others that are very efficient with a less spectacular game. In any style, the principles of fencing are the same. Naturally we have to insist that a beginner always take the parry in the same position within certain limits; but, as the fencer gains in individual skill, he may take the parry closer to the body or further away depending on circumstances. In short, a fencer may learn the principles of fencing from anybody who knows them; but to become a good fencer he must develop precision, speed and timing, and he must depend on simplicity, practice, experience and tactics. (See Alpar, Basic Theory and Practice of Competitive Fencing, American Fencing, December, 1957). Only a complete harmony between master and pupil can achieve the fencer's full potential.

Great masters and great fencers are the product of a fortunate meeting of high teaching ability and extraordinary pupil "material". The excellent master, if he gets an unusually talented fencer in his hands and under his influence, can develop his pupil to the point that his style will reach a new high in efficiency and will come to be connected with both of their names. Around them a little group is then formed with a tendency to further the development of that style. It is thus that fencing technique grows and progresses through the years.

MEMBERSHIP FUND DRIVE

Personal contributions from AFLA members cannot alone produce the large sum necessary for the World Championships. However, in connection with our efforts to raise money on the outside it has become very important that we show a substantial response from our own membership. If the fencers do not support the effort to gather the best swordsmen of the world at our shores, why should the non-fencers? Your donation, no matter how modest, is important. Returns to date are disappointing.

OPERATION BOOT STRAP

Here is an idea that could raise money for the World Championship fund and be a lot of fun too.

We urge Divisions and Clubs to organize local theatre parties as special World Championships benefit performances. Arrangements with MGM have set aside the existing prints of the Technicolor production of "Scaramouche." It has some of the longest and finest fencing scenes we've seen and is also a classic presentation of the early stock theatre companies and the causes that gave rise to the French Revolution. The film must be booked through regular channels by the local theatre manager, but here is what your group can do:

- (1) Sell the theatre manager on the idea of the special performance. Work out some system whereby you get a cut on the box office or are allowed to sell special tickets on which you will get a percentage.
- (2) Arrange to put on a short exhibition bout before the film is run, and at that time make a bid for donations by explaining that unlike European nations, we must raise the funds necessary for the Championships by appeals to the public. Point out that Russia is host next year and we do not want to compare unfavorably.
- (3) Get the local sports editor and theatre editor to cooperate in this benefit showing.
- (4) Distribute posters and promote the show in every way you can.
- (5) Set up a display in the lobby and arrange some method of collecting contributions after the show.

NYU INTERSCHOLASTIC

by J. R. de Capriles

For the fifth time in its 23-year history the trophy for this annual event was won by the Barringer High School of Newark. The tournament is sponsored by N.Y.U.'s Washington Square College and attracted twenty schools.

The winners, coached by Alan De Cicco, were undefeated in their ten-hour march to the title and received the Castello Trophy and gold medals. Silver medals went to Stuyvesant coached by Robin Krazer and bronze to Morris, coached by Jay Leibel. Alexander Hamilton was the fourth finalist.

Individual honors went to Israel Colon of Morris who won all of his bouts.

ELECTRICAL FOIL FACTS

Not everything has gone electronic - just important things like computers, guided missiles, epee and foil. Certain advantages are gained through electrification. Unfortunately, other problems do develop. Let us look at those "other problems" as related to the electrical foil and how to cope with them. This is specifically for those who have fenced electrical foil, want to, or who anticipate using the weapon in salles or in competitions. Our objective is to help minimize breakdowns in the weapons by emphasizing some of the do's and dont's to be observed in handling the weapons.

Electrical weapons are more complex and therefore it goes without saying that they are more subject to troubles than are the non-electrical counterparts. But from personal experience and observation I daresay that the weapon is durable, sturdy and, when properly constructed and cared for, it is reliable.

What are the trouble spots? There are only three, actually, that do not exist in the common foil: (1) the plunger-assembly, (2) the wire, and (3) the taping of the blade and the pommel. What about the blade itself? Doesn't it break easily? No. In fact, electrical-foil blades can be considered stronger than the non-electrical blades. The tape at the thin end, the wire and material in the wire-channel add to its strength and compensate for the groove cut into it.

The plunger-assembly is complex. Inside the sleeve at the top of the electrical foil blade is the point, a spring, two tiny retainer-screws, and a cup-shaped contact or to which the wire is attached. Each manufacturer of the plunger-assembly expresses his own individuality in construction, although they are all alike in basic design. With all of them, these cautions must be respected: never test the point by striking it against the floor, wall, mat or other non-resilient surface. Do, if you must test it, press it against your fencing shoe, your finger, your opponent (with his permission of course) or by asking the director to press the point.

It is because of the nature of the plunger-assembly, not of the blade, that fencers are advised against "forming" the blade in the familiar under-the-foot manner. Doing it that way drags the point along the ground and wreaks havoc with it. To straighten or curve your blade work it by hand or by drawing it across your thigh, making certain not to strike the point.

Some fencers have had the points "pop out" of the sleeve. This can occur when the two tiny retainer-screws (located under the tape, near the point) wear down from usage, are too short to begin with, or become loosened. It is recommended that, whenever you bring your weapon to your supplier for adjustment, you request that he replace these two retainer-screws with new ones. They cost just a few pennies, take a few seconds to replace, may prevent the loss of the more costly point.

Tension of the spring inside the assembly is extremely important to the game. If the tension is too soft, strong beats on the blade (given or received) can cause the "off target" signal to actuate when no touch has been made. It has been established that a tension of at least 500 grams is correct to prevent this defect - and to simulate proper pressure for theoretical penetration of the target. In all international competitions, and in our own national championships this year, bout directors are and will be equipped with weights for measuring the spring tension. The directors will test each weapon at the start of each bout and will reject those weapons too lightly adjusted. (Epee tests will be made with 750 grams weights). This is done to give both contestants an equal break in the amount of pressure required to actuate the apparatus. It is best, because of the experience and apparatus required for this adjustment, to have it made by your equipment supplier or a qualified technician.

We used to have considerable trouble with the wire in the channel of the blade. It would break open, or the insulation would chafe and the wire would short-circuit to the blade itself. If the wire breaks, it becomes impossible to reset the apparatus; it persistently indicates "off target" each time the operator attempts to reset the indicator. It's the same, electrically, as unplugging the weapon. If the wire shorts to the blade, the apparatus will reset alright, but neither valid nor invalid touches will register when the point is depressed. Considerable work has been done on this count and we feel assured that this type of breakdown has been minimized. Learn, too, about taping your blade. If the blade touches the metallic vest while the point is depressed against it (as often happens in an angulated thrust) nothing has happened as far as the electrical apparatus is concerned. Only the point itself must be allowed contact with the metallic vest during a scoring action. The tape insulates the blade from the vest. It is required that the tape extend from just below the point, covering the assembly sleeve and 6" down the length of the blade. Note that too thick a layer of tape adds weight at the tip where you don't want it and can conceal the serrated edges of the point, preventing the point from fixing on target in an angulated thrust. One layer of tape is sufficient.

Pommels must be taped. Should your opponent draw back his arm in an attempt to parry while infighting and should his pommel touch his metallic vest while you make a valid touch, no signal at all will be actuated. That works both ways, so make sure your pommel is taped or in some effective way electrically insulated. The director will see to it that your opponent's is, too. Ordinary adhesive tape is quite good for this purpose. Learn to examine the tape near the top of the sleeve of the assembly to make certain that no metal of the sleeve is showing.

You may have noticed that the technicians check weapons and body cords together. This is to make certain that they are compatible with the touch-indicator reels and apparatus. They are looking for correct terminal wiring of the weapons and body cords. The standard terminations for the Amphenol-type 3-prong body cord are as follows:

FOIL		EPEE
Pin #1—Blade & Guard	Pin #1—Blade & Guard
Pin #2—Point Wire	Pin #2—Point Wire
Pin #3—Clip for Vest	Pin #3—Point Wire

Note: Epee points utilize 2 wires, whereas Foil points utilize 1 wire. Pin #1 is the same for both weapons.

When, at the foil guard, a 2-prong Amphenol plug or receptacle is utilized the wiring is: Pin #1 to the Blade and Guard, Pin #2 to the Point Wire.

During the National Championships the electrical resistance of foils and epees will be checked in accordance with AFLA rules. Your equipment supplier can make this test for you in a jiffy and make any necessary adjustment. In foil, with the point at rest, the ohmic resistance between pins #1 and #2 at the guard receptacle should be less than 3.5 ohms. With the point depressed this resistance should be higher than 50,000 ohms. The resistance between the guard and pin #1 should not be more than 2.0 ohms regardless of the action of the point. In epee, with the point at rest, the ohmic resistance between pins #2 and #3 should not be less than 50,000 ohms. With the point depressed this resistance must be 3.0 ohms or less. The resistance between guard and pin #1 should not be more than 2.0 ohms, regardless of the action of the point.

Metallic vests will be inspected for electrical conductivity. Vests with holes or defective conduction will be rejected. The electrical resistance measured with an ohmmeter must not be more than 1.5 ohms, measured between any two points on the vest.

ATHLETE OF THE YEAR

The Associated Press reports that Mihaly Fulop, 21-year-old foil champion of the world, has been named "Athlete of the Year 1957" in the first poll in almost a decade, conducted by the Hungarian press. The selection is similar to the annual one in this country and points up the importance of fencing in a small country which has produced a surprising number of world and olympic champions in many sports.

ROCHESTER INTERNATIONAL

by Andre B. Sokey

This foil event for men and women was one of the strongest competitions ever held in the Western New York area. Despite impossible weather and 8" of snow, twenty men and seventeen ladies came to represent Toronto, Boston, New York City, Buffalo, Genese, Brighton Mass., and Rochester. There were several divisional champions and the one and only Joseph Levis.

Mr. Levis won the men's event but had a loss to Scipioni of Rochester who has come a long way after only three years of fencing.

Miss Brill of New York won the women's event.

The day before the competition Andre Sokey produced and narrated a half-hour TV show on fencing with the help of Miss Estey, Mr. Plouffe and Mr. Scipioni. Both events were successful and the money raised thereby was turned over to the division for the World Championship Fund.

FENCERS CLUB ON NATIONAL NETWORK

The CBS show "Let's Take a Trip" visited the Fencers Club of New York on Sunday, Jan. 19. Unfortunately final plans for the show did not crystalize until the last minute and we were unable to give our reads advance notice.

Sonny Fox and his two young companions, Joan and Jimmy, helped us present the history and modern techniques of fencing to their coast-to-coast audience. Jose de Capriles was the commentator and Michel Aloux conducted a class for children.

According to all reports the program was well received. CBS has given the Fencers Club a 16-mm kinescope of the production which was produced by James Colligan and directed by Tim Kiley. Associate producer was Selig Aikon and the script was by Heywood Kling.

THIS HAPPENS EVERY TIME YOU WIN A BOUT.

the new Gloves

We are happy to announce a solution to the problem of producing satisfactory fencing gloves domestically.

With the addition of new patterns (long in the testing) and new dies, we are manufacturing new gloves that are superior on every count.

They are made of Palomino leather, some with Pigskin palms (for superior wear-resistance). The gloves are snug at the wrist for proper fit, the thumb completely padded, the fingers padded in back down to the first joint. Index finger (double thickness) and palm of the hand are constructed in one piece for maximum freedom with no seams to constrict, irritate or interfere with fencing.

ORESTE PULITI

From Italy comes the saddening news that Oreste Puliti is no more. With him disappeared one of the last great amateurs of the era between the two world wars.

In the 1924 Olympic Games the Italian team was withdrawn due to a misunderstanding with the French and Hungarians before he could prove that he could beat them all - in foil as well as sabre. Instead he fought a duel with Kovacs Imre (not the younger Kovacs of today) and after an hour the combatants were separated due to the apparent helplessness of Puliti's opponent. Small compensation for the probable loss of one or even two Olympic gold medals.

A pupil of Beppo Nadi and on most of the Italian teams with Nedo and Aldo before they became professionals, he seldom was given an opportunity to reach for individual honors. The politics of fencing, officially denied and declared mere fiction by all team captains throughout the centuries, kept him in second or third place at the height of his athletic prowess.

He was a classicist. There was no concession on his part to the new developments of fencing at the cost of the old game. A beautiful, compact figure, forceful in his attacks, supreme in his parries, fast as lightning, he gave a picture of all we cherished so much in fencing in days gone by.
